MUST ACCEPT THE UNIONS

Basis on Which Labor Will Treat With Employers

FAIR LOGICAL ATTITUDE

The Industrial Peace Conference of the Future Will Be Composed of Union Workers and Union Employees
—The Carnegie Meeting.

There are many and varied opinions among workmen upon the question of arbitration of industrial disputes as that question was presented at the recent Carnegie reception in New York city. The practical thing accomplished at Mr. Carnegie's was the adoption of President Butler's proposition for an international industrial peace congress, writes Joseph R. Buchanan in the New York Journal.

And yet there are some members of trades unions who shy at that proposal. They are the radicals, the irreconcilables and the class conscious ones. They do not believe that anything beneficial to the working class can come from a gathering in which the employing and the idle classes predominate, and this feeling is accentuated because of the fact that the meeting was held under the roof of a man who has always been considered one of the worst foes of labor unionism.

It was rather a striking situation which presented as the host and the presiding officer of an industrial peace conference the two men who stand out as among the largest employers opposing trades unionism in their respective periods of business activity. Fifteen years ago the name of Andrew Carnegie was anathema in the minds of trades unionists. Today August Belmont is at the head of one of the largest corporations in the country which refuse to recognize union labor.

It has been pointed out by labor men who attended the Carnegie conference that there were among those most in the limelight on that occasion several gentlemen who are leading advocates of the open shop, which is another name for nonunion shops. The open shop doctrine and unionism will not mix.

But it is easy to understand how these irreconcilable conflicting elements were brought together at the conference. It is just so that the Civic federation is made up, and the Carnegie conference was arranged by the Civic federation. "Like mother, like child."

While the Civic federation may possibly continue to exist in its present sphere, though composed of conflicting elements, a movement which expects its policies to be accepted by the army of union labor will have to be formed upon very different lines.

Employers who desire to deal with union labor must accept the union as an established fact and in the conduct of their business must recognize it as the representative and mouthpiece of their employees. No union will sit in conference upon questions of wages, hours of labor and other things related to employment with nonunion or open shop employers. To do so would show such a union lacking in common sense.

Therefore it would be well for the promoters of an industrial peace conference to understand that organized labor will take no part in such conference if it is to be bound by decisions in the making of which nonunion employers have a voice.

There can be no representation of the labor side of industrial questions except it comes from the organized workers. This even the open shop advocates realize; hence organized labor is invited to take part in all arbitration, mediation, conciliation and other peace plans.

Therefore, again, union labor insists that those with whom it makes common cause shall unconditionally accept the fact of labor organization and that they shall conduct the industries over which they have control in consonance with that fact. This is a perfectly logical attitude for organized labor to take.

If sincerity guides and practical wisdom shapes the plans for an industrial peace conference, the conference when held will be composed of union workers, union employers and those who accept the trades union as the best expression of the hopes and aims of the working class. There will be no room for open shoppers or the half baked who accept unionism with a long string of reservation and "buts."

And there is hidden a gentle tip for the Civic federation.

Old English Law on Labor Unions. Modern union labor men may be interested in labor conditions in 1783 as set forth in an old law.

This old time statute of England combined the following six clauses: Any stonecutter who joined a union was to be sent to jail for two months. He must work from 6 o'clock in the morning until 8 at night.

Wages were not to be higher than 48 cents a day. Each man was to be allowed 3 cents for breakfast.

Any one who refused to work was to be imprisoned for not more than two months.

If any employer paid higher wages he was to be fined $25, and the stonecutters who took the increase were to be sent to jail for two months.

Giraffes.

Giraffes are the most difficult animals to trap. They are caught with lassos, bolas or ratinas, a kind of net. The only animal impossible to trap is the giraffe. It is too strong and fierce.

STRIKES OF THE PAST.

Labor Troubles, Few Until Advent of Nineteenth Century. Until the beginning of the nineteenth century strikes were of rare occurrence and did not have very much of an effect upon labor conditions.

From 1821 to 1834 there occurred one or two strikes each year. In 1834 the female shoe binders of Lynn, Mass., struck for an increase of wages, but failed, as their places were taken by others who would do the work for the same price. The number of strikes increased so rapidly about that time that the New York Daily Advertiser stated that "strikes are now all the fashion."

No close records of strikes was kept after that time until the government, in taking the census of 1880, made a record of the number occurring during the census year. The strikes of that year numbered 610 and the lockouts 152. The records kept after that time for thirteen and a half years show that the number of strikes per year varied from 443 in 1884 to nearly 1,800 in one or two years. Of all the strikes 90 per cent occurred in the thirteen industries as here given, and the number occurring in each decreases as we approach the end of the list: Building trades, coal and coke, tobacco, clothing, foods, metals, transportation, stone quarrying and cutting, boots and shoes, furniture, bricks, printing and publishing, coöperation.

During this time 3,714,406 people were thrown out of employment, of whom 91 per cent were males and the other 9 per cent females. At the same time 336,000 were thrown out of employment by lockouts, of whom over 77 per cent were males and over 22 per cent females. In all these strikes there were 69,167 establishments involved, of which 49,120 were in the five states of Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania. The lockouts affected 6,007 establishments, of which 4,900 were in the same five states. The average duration of the strikes was 25.4 days and of the lockouts 42.6 days. Forty-four and a half per cent of the strikes and 40.1 per cent of the lockouts were successful; 44.4 per cent of the strikes and 47.4 per cent of the lockouts failed. The rest were partly successful.

The total loss to employees in the strikes was $104,000,000 and in the lockouts $20,985,516, or an average of $44 for each man involved. The labor unions sacrificed $13,500,000 to help the strikers and the employers lost $55,000,000; or in all over $300,000,000 was lost in the strikes of thirteen and one-half years.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
